Snake Myths.

Snakes have no medicinal qualities, and the following popular notions are myths: That galls of snakes are an antidote for snake bites; that their oil is good for rheumatism, baldness and deafness; that wearing their skins will cure rheumatism or stiffness; that a snake heart, oil or blood is good for consumption or other ills; that snake flesh should be eaten for blood disorders; that a second life of the snake in the same place will cure or counteract the first bite; that rattlers of snakes are charms.

"No, no! I. Dae ye think I eat 50 shillings' worth of ham?"—London Answers.

She is over eighty years old, and, of course, does not expect to be cured, but she is more than glad to know of a medicine which brings such prompt relief as Doan's Kidney Pills. The Limit of Life.

The most eminent medical scientists are unanimous in the conclusion that the general expected limitation of human life is many years beyond the attainment possible with the advanced knowledge of which the race is now possessed. The critical period that determines its duration seems to be between 50 and 60; the proper care of the body during this decade cannot be too strongly urged; careless living being fatal to longevity. Nature's best helper after 50 is Electric Bitters, the scientific tonic medicine that revitalizes every organ of the body. Guaranteed by Red Cross pharmacy. Price 50c.

FARMERS SWAP WIVES.

Make Deal By Mutual Consent, and Then Had Double Wedding.

Omaha, Neb., Aug. 10.—Abraham N. Endler and Edward D. Soper, two former Sweetwater county farmers, have contrived in a lawful way to trade wives. According to reports just received from Vermillion, they recently applied for and obtained decrees of divorce and a few days ago, at a double wedding celebrated in Arizona, each took as wife the woman the other had divorced.

The two men and their wives had been friends and intimates for years. With no ill feeling on the part of any of them, they agreed that it would be better for the two men to trade wives and the husbands went to South Dakota and procured divorces, the wives permitting the divorces to be obtained without contest.

The happy pairs have gone to Western Canada together to make their homes.

WOMEN TO WADE IN PRIZE CONTEST.

Cleveland Republican Club Arrange Beauty Show; Churches in Arms.

Cleveland, Aug. 10.—The Republican league is being attacked from all sides because it has arranged novel contests for women for its picnic to be held Aug. 24. The contests to which the protests have been made are the beauty contest, beautiful forearm match and the wading contest, the latter coming in for most of the complaint.

Churchmen, club women, religious societies and other bodies have criticized the contests. The wading contest medal will go to the woman who raises her skirts the highest and the contest will take place in an improvised pool of clear water. The further from the bank a contestant wades the deeper the water.

The league gave a picnic last year that was attended by 20,000 persons, and with the added interest which the wading contest will arouse it is expected fully 50,000 will be on hand this year.

WILL LIVE TO BE 94.

Rockefeller's Doctor Says Standard Oil Head Has Renewed Youth.

Cleveland, O., Aug. 10.—That John D. Rockefeller will live to be more than 94 years old was the prediction made today by his family physician, Dr. Hamilton F. Biggar. "He is the best trained athlete in the sixty-eight-year-old class in the world," said the doctor. "He has been born twice, physically, and is only fourteen years old."

Dr. Biggar then told how it cost the oil king $5,000,000 to get second life. He said he came to Cleveland during the panic in 1893, completely broken down in health.

"Doctor, I am afraid I am going to die," he told Dr. Biggar.

The doctor prescribed a course of business and absolute rest; and put him on a diet. In a month he went back to New York a new man. Later Rockefeller told Dr. Biggar that it cost him $5,000,000 to be given a new man.

"Dropping out of business cost me that sum," said the old king.

FROM THE MAGAZINES.

Alcohol's Use to Man.

Professor Robert Kennedy Duncan, of the university of Kansas, writes in Harper's Magazine for August of the development of alcohol as an industrial agent. Now that the tax on industrial alcohol has been reduced, there seems to be no limit to its future value in manufactures, in lighting, heating, and as motor power. It is probable, if some objections can be overcome, that it will run all our automobiles, superseding gasoline, which although much cheaper now is infinitely inferior in cleanliness and general effectiveness. Several processes are in the course of development by which alcohol can probably be produced from cellulose, in which case "sawdust, stubble, straw, corn-cobs, old rags," would yield it. Its use will then be universally adopted.

A Factory Romance.

So brief is the opportunity for personal life with working-people that perhaps in the little time when they enter into self-consciousness they live all the more ardently and vitally. There is a peculiar intimation of this in Maude Radford's immensely human and compelling story of factory life. "An Idyl of the Yards" in the August McClure's tells the story of a factory girl of the modern type—vigorous, self-reliant, unpretentious—who suddenly meets and grapples with a moral dilemma of which all her worldly-wise experience has taught her nothing. One loses sight of economic laws and theories in reading this tale, so absorbing is the interest of the human problem; but by implication she is still there, and gives his fresh and original tale a background of unusual perspective.

To Check the Gnawing Sea.

"Now that a royal commission on coast erosion is trying to find some way to save enough of England from the waves to supply a site for headquarters from which to govern the rest of the British empire, it may be remarked without any appearance of seeking to bear seaside real estate that the final revisions of geography were not made by the great cataclysms of the remote past. The hungry sea, forever gnawing at its coasts, is working changes in continents and islands, which, measured by geological standards, are rapid." So writes Charles Frederick Carter in the Technical World Magazine for August.

"If processes now active should be continued uninterruptedly, the time is near at hand, by the geological calendar, when some extraordinary transformations will have been wrought on the face of the earth. If it were possible for mortal perception to penetrate the future, perhaps steamships might be seen plowing the waters over the very spots where Galveston, New Orleans, Savannah and Charleston now stand on their way to wharves far inland from the present coast line. Perhaps the long swell of the ocean might be seen rolling across what are now Long Island and Manhattan island to break upon the palisades. Perhaps Holland might once more form a part of the North sea. Berlin and Paris might be the chief seaports of Germany and France, instead of Hamburg and Havre, long since submerged."

"This is not a prophecy, nor are the possibilities outlined so preposterous as at first glance they might appear. Many more marvelous metamorphoses have taken place in this hoary old world since it first began its circuit round the sun. Plato tells a story which is corroborated by a vast amount of circumstantial evidence, at least as far as the evidence of expert medical testimony at a murder trial, of an island continent in the ocean off the entrance to the Mediterranean which was the cradle of civilization. Its people were the conquerors of Europe and Egypt, the colonizers of the Americas, the progenitors of the Mound-builders and the Aztecs. This island, which Plato called Atlantis, with all its inhabitants, was swallowed by the sea at a single gulp in one dread day and night."

An article which relates some extraordinary facts follows, in which the writer tells of efforts being made for the prevention of the sea's ravages. It is well illustrated with photographs.

Making Cloth from Paper.

"To the ingenuity of Herr Emil Claviez, a well-known Saxon inventor and manufacturer, is due the production of a paper yarn termed 'Zylofin,' that has been successfully used in a wide range of textile fabrics." So writes Frank N. Bauskett in the Technical World Magazine for August.

"The utilization of paper wood fibre in this practical way and the extreme cheapness of the new material compared with other yarns now in use, is really a most remarkable achievement. This is not a haphazard discovery, but rather the logical result of years of painstaking study and experimentation. After the final development of the theory at first in mind into tangible material for all manner of uses in textile industries, the paper thread and yarn, loose or tightly spun, of all thicknesses, have since been woven into almost every conceivable fabric and tested and retested, until the invention has become an important commercial success. The paper yarn has extraordinary wearing properties, and as the full scope of its usefulness has probably not been determined, it will, in all likelihood, lend itself to other purposes yet to be discovered."

The writer follows this introduction with an excellent article on the new invention and the new fabric.

What More Could She Ask.

"You used," she complained, "to treat me so affectionately, and to use so many words of endearment when you spoke to me. Now you are so matter of fact."

"Well," he replied with a yawn, "didn't I prove by marrying you that I liked you?"—Judge.

Made an Enemy of Pa.
